UNDERGRADUATE
CONCENTRATION IN REGIONAL STUDIES - LATIN AMERICA

The Concentration in Regional Studies in Latin America is designed to give undergraduates the general mastery of a discipline and at the same time permit them to do specialized work in the language, history, and culture of the Latin American region. Students take core courses that give them grounding in the language, history, politics, and cultures of Latin America as well as courses in a discipline of choice. The disciplines of choice include anthropology, art history and archaeology, economics, history, music, political science, sociology, Spanish and Portuguese, and urban studies. A minimum of 18 credits (a minimum of 6 courses) is needed to fulfill the requirements for the Concentration in Regional Studies in Latin America.

Requirements for the Concentration in Latin American and Caribbean Studies:

The minimum number of credits is 18 (6 courses). Up to 6 credits for requirement C (Discipline of Choice) can be earned through study abroad. Students are strongly encouraged to explore study abroad options before their junior year. Upon return, they should submit syllabi and all coursework related to each course taken abroad for approval by the Director of Undergraduate Studies.

- A. Three (3) courses from the following fourteen (14) courses. One of these courses must be LACV CC1020: Primary Texts of Latin American Civilization, HIST UN2660: Latin American Civilization I, or HIST UN2661: Latin American Civilization II:

 14. SPAN UN3300: Advanced Language through Content (with Latin American focus)
- B. One course on Spanish, Portuguese, or an indigenous language at the intermediate or advanced level: If students can demonstrate advance knowledge of one of these languages they can replace this course with a course on other languages at any level. For example, students in advanced Spanish may replace with Portuguese or Indigenous language.
- C. Discipline of Choice/Specialization: Two courses in a discipline of choice or specialization with substantive focus on Latin America. Of these two courses: 1 must be a Seminar within the choice/specialization, and 1 course within the choice/specialization. The director of undergraduate studies advises students on areas of specialization and must approve courses with substantial Latin American or Caribbean contents not included in the list of eligible courses.
